

Critical Thinking and Media Literacy

Today I want to talk about two very important ideas: critical thinking and media literacy. In our world, we see a lot of information every day. It is on the internet, on social media, and on the news. But, is all this information true? Maybe not.

For this reason, we need critical thinking. This means we should not believe everything we see or read immediately. It is good to ask questions like: Who wrote this? Why did they write it? Is this information complete?

Media literacy is like a tool. It helps us to understand the information we see. It teaches us how to find good information and how to ignore the bad information. For example, we need to check if a news story is from a serious website.

For me as a student, this is very important. In software, we also need to find good information to solve problems. I am learning to be more critical with the information I use for my studies and my life.

It is not always easy, but it is necessary to learn!
